

Chris Botts, Director, Value-Based Care, American Medical Association

Director, Value-Based Care within the Professional Satisfaction & Practice Sustainability group at the American Medical Association (AMA). In this capacity, he helps lead AMA's efforts to advance new models of care delivery and payment that improve the sustainability of physician practices by removing obstacles to patient care and enabling physicians to learn, adapt, thrive, and lead in a rapidly evolving health care environment. This includes leading AMA's Value-Based Care (VBC) and Behavioral Health Integration (BHI) Initiatives, which incorporates the BHI Collaborative, a partnership between 12 of the nation's leading physician organizations focused on catalyzing timely, sustainable whole-person care. Prior to joining the AMA, he worked at the Center for Health Policy at the Brookings Institution in Washington, DC where he supported the Center's payment and delivery reform initiatives including those related to Medicare alternative payment models and health plan innovations. Mr. Botts also worked at the Health Care Reform and Innovation Administration within the District of Columbia's Department of Health Care Finance designing and implementing new, innovative health care delivery and health IT programs. Mr. Botts earned a Bachelor of Science (BS) in Neuroscience with a concentration in Premedical Studies from the College of William and Mary.
